Herimannus vicedominus Mogontinus. LAMPERT. HERSFELD., Ann., a. 1065, ed. FRITZ, p. 104. 3. Dans certaines régions de la France, notamment dans les provinces ecclésiastiques de Reims et de Sens, les vicedomini deviendront, aux Xe et XIe siècles, des seigneurs laïcs, souvent en possession d'un château-fort. En ces seigneurs-vidames se sont combinés l'avocat et le vicedominus carolingiens, donc lieutenant et protecteur armé de l'évêché, et principal intendant et administrateur du palais et des biens épiscopaux — in some regions of France, especially in the ecclesiastical provinces of Reims and Sens, the vicedomini develop, during the tenth and eleventh centuries, into lay lords, combining the functions of the carolingian advocatus and vicedominus, thus becoming the lieutenant and armed protector of the bishopric, and the principal guardian and administrator of the episcopal palace and possessions. Ado vicedominus [sc. Laudunensis]... cum ad episcopi domum tendens ab universo impeteretur cuneo, hasta et gladio tantopere restitit, ut tres de insistentibus sibi in momento prosterneret. GUIBERT. NOVIC., De vita sua, lib. 3 c. 8, ed. BOURGIN, p. 165. Vicedomini Adonis uxor. Ib., c. 9, p. 171. wadium, va-, ga-, gai-, gua-, -dia, -gium, -ddium, -tgium (< got. wadi, "gage — pledge", > angl. wed, wage, gage, teuton. Wette, belg. wedde, frg. gage): 1. un objet engageant de manière symbolique la personne ou les biens d'un débiteur, qui, par suite d'un acte illicite ou en vertu d'un contrat bilatéral, a assumé des obligations envers un créancier. En remettant cet objet entre les mains du créancier, le débiteur concède au créancier le pouvoir de le contraindre, en cas de non-exécution, à s'acquitter de ses obligations, par la voie de contrainte par corps ou saisie de biens. Souvent le débiteur présente un garant, auquel le créancier remet le "wadium", lui conférant par là le droit, et en même temps l'obligation, de contraindre le débiteur à s'acquitter. Le wadium est remis au débiteur après acquittement de ses obligations. — an object, which in a symbolic way binds a person or his property (the debtor) who, in consequence of an unlawful act or a contract, has assumed obligations towards the opposite party (the creditor). By handing this object to the creditor, the debtor gives the creditor the right to enforce, in case of non-performance, the fulfilment of the debtor's obligations, by seizing his person or property. Often the debtor presents a guarantor, to whom the creditor hands the "wadium", thus conferring upon this guarantor the right, and at the same time the duty, to force the debtor to fulfil his obligations. The wadium is handed back to the debtor after fulfilment of his obligations. (teuton. "Haftungssymbol zur Begründung einer Personal- oder Sachhaftung für den Fall der Nichterfüllung einer Schuld").
